Weisman Art Museum presents Seeking for the Lost, portraits by Christopher E. Harrison of those sold or “lost” during slavery, as described in local Black newspaper classified ads from the period

June 28, 2024, Minneapolis, MN: Weisman Art Museum (WAM) presents Seeking for the Lost, on view from August 3, 2024 – February 16, 2025. This exhibition views the details of often overlooked histories, with an artistic lens. Featuring portraiture by contemporary artist Christopher E. Harrison, Seeking for the Lost explores the unbreakable familial bonds expressed through ads in the St. Paul newspaper The Appeal; presents the post-Reconstruction goals of Minnesota’s Black press; and shows how literacy informed the lives of Black Americans after the Civil War.

Organized by the African American Interpretive Center of Minnesota and curated by JoJo Bell, the exhibition centers on the eponymous “Seeking for the Lost” column from The Appeal, a Black-owned and operated St. Paul newspaper. The column printed ads from those seeking family members who had been sold or “lost” during slavery and through the post-Reconstruction period. Informally, small ads started appearing in the paper in 1888; by 1891, The Appeal was publishing the ads as a permanent column. The Appeal was not the first paper to print such ads, but in this newspaper the ads were free, signaling the publication's significant commitment to help readers find family, at no cost, as well as its resolve to uplift a new, post-Reconstruction generation desperate to reconnect with loved ones lost to slavery.

Each painting by Christopher Harrison in the exhibition imagines what a missing subject described in "Seeking for the Lost" might have looked like. By portraying each lost family member with a distinct perspective and personality, Harrison's art emphasizes kinship as a unifying power and literacy as a means of endurance.

WAM senior curator, Diane Mullin, says: "We were immediately interested in presenting this fascinating exhibition of an important chapter in the state's, and country's, history — that of the Black experience in the immediate aftermath of the Civil War and its reverberation to the present day."

"Seeking for the Lost sheds light on the existence of important networks of reunion for Black families in the years immediately following the Civil War," writes exhibition curator JoJo Bell. "We hope the exhibition will be revelatory about African American history in Minnesota."

Also upcoming this fall at the Weisman

Kara Walker: Harper's Pictorial History of the Civil War \(Annotated\)

On view: September 27, 2024 - January 5, 2025

The Weisman's featured exhibition this fall, organized by the New Britain Museum of American Art and Museum Box, presents Kara Walker's print portfolio, Harper's Pictorial History of the Civil War (Annotated), 2005. This suite of 15 large-scale prints considers experiences of racism and violence against African Americans that were absent or only alluded to in dominant historical representations of the Civil War. Shown with Walker's series is a group of 13 original Harper's Weekly engravings of the Civil War by the New England-born and -based, nineteenth century American realist artist, Winslow Homer (1836-1910). While not all of Walker's "annotated" works are addressed to Homer works, this pairing—of Walker’s contemporary prints with examples of works from the Harper’s material that inspired her—opens opportunities to consider both the connections and distinctions between the two bodies of work.
